FURNISHING YOUR GARDEN RETREAT

The span of summer days ahead brings thoughts of rejoined families spending leisure time together, much of it outdoors in garden areas. Gardens and their adjoining areas are now known as outdoor living rooms, dining rooms, and kitchens. The idea was introduced worldwide at the Chelsea Flower Show in 1999. Bringing the Indoors Outside or "blurring the lines" between the two was the theme featured in their garden vignettes and that spark of an idea is now a raging inferno that has changed the way that people think about their patios. Most homeowners are realizing the value of their outdoor living spaces and in many households, garden retreats have become the home's hub of activity.

Within the garden retreat, color has burst upon the scene this year. Garden furnishings were once available only in green or brown, with an occasional black, or white set thrown in. Garden furniture is now available in truly scrumptious colors to choose from, such as butter yellow, tangerine, rosebud, fuchsia, chartreuse, blue, and poppy red as well.

Folding tables and chairs were created at the end of the 1800's for small cafes in France. The bistro furniture that Wilshire Garden Market carries was developed from the original patent registered by Edouard Lecler in 1889. Our philosophy is to offer furniture that is of long lasting quality and style that does not look like it was picked up on a Saturday Sam's run. Bistro furniture is beautiful, durable, and useful. Some of Europe's finest designers work to combine comfort, style, and practicality to this furniture. Made of steel and painted with numerous coats of automotive paint, it passes rigorous "sit tests" of 300 lbs for 30,000 uses. Its sizes and shapes make it versatile enough to fit a variety of situations; many pieces fold for storage. Tables range from 24"-54" round, 28" square, to 118" rectangular. Styles range from romantic to sleek contemporary.

Cafes and resorts from Barcelona and throughout the Mediterranean have been using bistro furniture for decades and now we are learning to enjoy this urban casual furniture.

Teak is another obvious choice in garden furnishings. Teak is a deciduous hardwood from the highlands of Southeast Asia. It has a naturally high oil content that makes it both stable and resistant to rotting when exposed to the elements. For several centuries teak has been the choice for yacht decks and yacht construction. It can be oiled to retain its original color; however that annual chore is not necessary. Teak ages naturally to a lovely silver patina and will last approximately 100 years.

The teak furniture that Wilshire Garden Market supplies for customers is made in England by the world's oldest and largest teak furniture manufacturer. The wood is grown in a 150 year old managed plantation; the trees are carefully selected and harvested, and new trees are regularly planted to replenish the supply.

Teak furniture is available in a range of styles from classic to mission style, adding an elegant touch that will enhance virtually every garden setting. Although teak is actually very comfortable, cushions or several fluffy pillows can be added for extra added comfort and color.

The furniture gracing a garden retreat is no longer just a picnic table on which to slap paper plates piled high with picnic food; it is the personal representation of its owner, and is just as important to the character of the home as the indoor dining room furniture.

WICKED, WICKED WEEDS

Annual weeds produce up to 15,000 seeds! Weed seeds are carried by the wind, water, people, and animals. The spread of weeds can be stopped by never allowing them to go to seed. Learn to identify weeds vs. other young seedlings, weed the garden effectively, do weekly checks of your garden, and apply mulch to discourage weed growth before they start. Perennial weeds, such as dandelions, must be dug up by the root to prevent their return.

JUNE'S FLOWER IS THE ROSE

Everyone loves roses, although not everyone knows how to care for roses in the garden. Caring for roses is not as difficult as it is rumored to be. Work into your garden routine some simple procedures and have beautiful, healthy roses.

Roses should be pruned lightly in the spring. Spray roses regularly with a well known brand of preventative for black spot (make this part of your gardening routine). Deadhead the flowers to allow the plant to prepare another flowering. Prune a small amount of the stem after each flower has finished encouraging more blooms. Cut just above a stem that has five leaves facing toward the outer edge of the plant to encourage blooming growth in that direction.

Remove all clippings from underneath to prevent disease. Water the plant well at its roots; roses need an inch of water each week. Apply several inches of mulch in the fall being careful not to place mulch right next to the trunk, and fertilize established roses in June and in the late winter. Keep watch for aphids, powdery mildew, as well as black spot.

For a stunning vignette, plant Clematis in a complimentary color to mingle into a climbing rose. A small climbing rose trained on an umbrella rose tuteur makes a beautiful vertical garden feature.

TOADALLY AT HOME

We have been stocking terra cotta toad houses since we opened the store seven years ago. The English distributor told us that toads love to find damp, cool hiding places in the shade during the hot summer days, and we have been telling our customers. We have been carrying signed original toad houses by potter Mike Paluska for more than a year. They are high fired to be resistant to winter weather (note the chimney). This photograph was sent in by a customer who recently purchased a ceramic toad house. She placed the toad house over a toad in her garden, and then she was concerned that the toad might be too large to get out through the front door, so she picked up the toad house and moved it a distance away. The next morning, she picked up the toad house and the toad had let himself back in.
